The following information was obtained from the records of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, Washington, D.C., regarding the activities of the Central Intelligence Agency during the period from January 1, 1960, to December 31, 1960.

The Central Intelligence Agency has been authorized to conduct foreign intelligence operations in accordance with the provisions of the National Security Act of 1949, as amended. The agency's primary mission is to collect, process, analyze, and disseminate intelligence information to assist the President and the Secretary of State in making decisions on national security matters.

In 1960, the Central Intelligence Agency conducted a variety of intelligence operations, including the collection of information on the activities of foreign governments, political parties, and individuals; the analysis of this information; and the dissemination of the results of such analysis to the appropriate government departments and agencies.

The Central Intelligence Agency also conducted a number of covert operations during the year 1960, which were designed to influence the course of events in various foreign countries. These operations included the provision of financial assistance to certain groups and individuals, the recruitment of agents, and the execution of sabotage operations.

The Central Intelligence Agency's activities during 1960 were carried out in strict accordance with the laws and regulations governing its operations. The agency's actions were aimed at maintaining the national security of the United States and supporting our foreign policy objectives.
